

Planning considerations for executors

Every estate is different. Here's a starting list of things to consider for those who have been appointed as executor. You can use the blanks below to add your own ideas as you consult with a trust and estate attorney.

Check on the needs of loved ones left behind. Consider well-being and financial needs of dependents and care of pets.

---

Create a notification plan for family and friends.

---

Contact decedent's trust and estate attorney and other professionals.

---

If nominated as executor, contact an attorney to discuss qualifying with the court to be appointed executor.

---

Contact decedent's employer. If decedent was self-employed, determine how to gather pertinent records.

---

Identify paperwork you may need, such as:

- Estate planning documents
- Copies of the death certificate
- Federal and state income tax returns
- Insurance policies — life, home, auto, and other property and casualty insurance
- Statements from financial institutions
- Bills — credit cards, utilities, hospital, medical care, loans, etc.
- Ownership documents
- Social Security Administration correspondence
- Digital assets and accounts

Identify other people and organizations with a need to know, including but not limited to:

- Financial institutions where the decedent had accounts or safe deposit boxes
  - Accountant, financial advisor, and tax advisor
  - Life insurance companies
  - Current and former employers and agencies from which the decedent received benefits
  - Mortgage lenders and county recorder or registrar
  - Utilities, services, and creditors
